

The final boss of the game, resembling the unnamed narrator of the raven (which will be eap), he calls the MC Lenore, and is obsessed with this idea of Annabel that doesn't exist. He describes her beauty to no end but never once anything else about her, and truly detests that she refuses to just be Lenore

maybe name the man William Wilson

Should be wedding bells in the soundtrack ("the Bells") in order to fully show the delusion of the man

2nd most important character besides Annabel Lee

Needs to be visually opposite to Annabel, so he has opposite colors, opposite stance (insane vs poise), and opposite attitude

Arene for this is different, it is a massive church with stained glass on the walls, and you walk up the altar to fight the boss, all as bells are tolling, you cannot run to the boss. He has a bit of an intro (see below) and an exit (see Official Story).

The fight begins with him spreading his huge raven wings as he shows off his feather cloak (style in first image, actual cloths in second) His face is mostly covered by a giant bird mask and underneath he looks like Poe

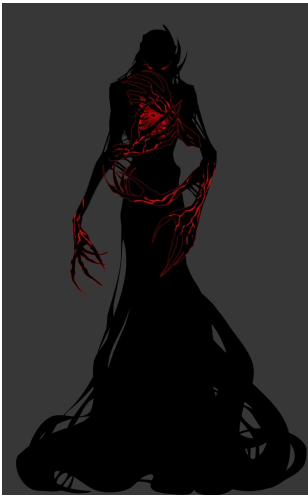

For his weapon he has a super massive (maybe 2x his size) pole arm with a beautiful ornate blade that looks like it has feathers coming out, but they are knives. Its glowing a birhgt silver around the dangerous parts of the weapon and those who look close will see the handle is also a blade, making the raven and the mans hands drip with blood.

His stance is that of hatred and loss of sanity looking down at the player and through pissed, yet desperate eyes.

For attacks his slashes with his giant polearm a few times, and as they connect, silver slashes are left behind in front of the player.

As for his second attack, he sends out raven to cover the player and hit them as hard as possible

If we have time for a third attack, he hold out his hand to make Annabel Lee stab herself, with great resistance from Annabel

Intro to fight:

"Ah broken is my golden bride! But your spirit flows forth this manor forever

Let the bell toll! (bells start playing) for back to her love has come my beautiful misguided Lenore!"

Come! let the marriage rite be read -- the wedding song be sung an Anthem to our queenliest betrayer that ever fooled so young

A Dirge for
