

3 Act story

testing

Collecting eyes to reveal more of the past, also the meta currency

You learn the relevant post boss info with a npc or letter or something in the following act upon discovering their body. Would be so cool to have a room where ominous music plays and its just a body on the ground.

The game starts off with the player being approached by The Raven and The Man (the representation of poe), with the offer to kill a man by the name of Prospero for an exorbitant amount of money. The player accepts this deal, they are blessed by the man and begins the game

(not money, supposed to be something that makes it more thematic)

The player makes their way through the house and encounters a slew of characters and enemies, before making their way to Prospero. The battle ensues and as the player is about to kill Prospero, he reveals the truth behind The Raven and The Man. he actually put a curse on you to make you stay here forever, to become his wife that he lost (references to "the raven", "Lenore" and "Ligeia"). You need to kill Prospero, even though he is an innocent person, as that will lead to the MC' development of madness, will reflect in the second boss, and will pay off when you die in the end.

Here the curse really starts to affect the MC and they start seeing things that aren't there, their madness inflicting them and their perception of reality distorted. One of the main characts alludes that The Raven and The Man has a similar curse

After finding out that Prospero betrayed The Raven and The Man, The Raven and The Man send out The Mesmerist to make Annabel Lee the perfect wife, that of one who doesn't speak, move or act against him. The Player must fight him off as well. He only does these bad things as he is desperate for cash, how his life is over if doesn't do this, and how he was preyed on but still ends up doing something terrible. Parallels our main character as they took this job out of desperation and pay.

Finally, the game ends with the mad, The Raven and The Man as he attempts to make Annabel his, with wedding bells chiming in the background ("The Bells"), he keeps calling her Lenore in a vain attempt to make recompense for his loss. You eventually kill him as you and make your way to a Sepulcher (like in "Annabel Lee"), and die, knowing you help rid the world of a terrible person

You need to choose to end the game in this way, you need to understand that its better to take your own life then harm others. Player NEEDS agency You kill yourself to prevent the madness overtaking you and becoming The Raven and The Man and for the guilt of your murder of Prospero bad ending could be that you continue to exist? Could be the play

Themes: (all are classic EAP and gothic themes with a woke twist)

- How our perception of love is messed up, where even a perfect person couldn't please, both relevant in gothic lit and today's dating culture
 - Hyperreality is the idea that our reality has been changed by the art/things we made of the original thing, changing how we view the original thing. In this case, how we made love stories and movies to represent the feelings of love, but now how we approach love is based on those movies. This game critiques that idea
- How madness can afflict anyone, from a man obsessed with a perfect life (The Raven and The Man), to a man trapped by the world (Fortunado), and finally to the main character, a victim of the hateful
- The inevitability of death and learning to accept that
- Fuck Pedophiles

Annabel Lee represents the innocent, thrust into a life they wouldn't wish on their worst enemy, by those that desire more from their world

Prospero represents the inevitability of death, and the need to accept it, and not fear it

The Mesmerist Represents those that choose to go along with evil, despite their better reservations, for the sake of desperation

The Raven and The Man Represents the insatiability of man and how someone filled with hate can never love