

"The Facts in the Case of M. Valdem "

Essentially tries to put the player in a state of comatose in order to make them the perfect wife for The Raven and The Man

Only does these bad things as he is desperate for cash, how his life is over if doesn't do this, and how he was preyed on but still ends up doing something terrible

Parallels our main character as they took this job out of desperation and pay ! (defies expectations)

Once they are killed, they believe they will be revived by their god, but rather they are revived by the devil, and their color scheme becomes more red and black. Thier motivation remains protecting The Raven and The Man, not hearing your reason, as they go further and further into delusion

His ability to hypnotize the player makes there be threee copies of him, not knowing which one to hit, further more, one of his hypnotic abilities is to reduce your action points by 1

For the actual design of the boss I think a fallen angel is a beautiful metaphor here, as they think they are fighting for good, but have been tricked into the same trap as Annabel Lee

So they will have a broken halo/crown over their head, with wings being black to signify their decent into this place. As for his body, they are extremely thing, with long lower limbs, and a nervous temperament, and black hair. Hair style should be like the first image above, and for their skin they must be pale white. Eyes yellowed by a madness, and a disapproving frown for the player. They should have eyes all over their body, as that is a way of hypnotism and accurate for angels

For their weapon, they cant have a clock of a string as that is too visually similar to Prospero, so instead I'm imagining they fight with their fingers, similar to ty lee in atla <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qvx6NiccDVA> or like a monk might in dnd. They could also use their voice and spirals

To make them more unsettling they should have verry vissible bones, and long arms. They dont move correctly, sporadic and bending the wrong way

For clothes Im thinking torn fabric that is mostly white and silver, but falling apart to represent their fall like this :

